UK Outlook for Tuesday 28 Dec 2021 to Thursday 6 Jan 2022:
This period remains somewhat uncertain in detail, but generally sees a split between colder air to the north and milder air to the south. Looking to remain unsettled with further spells of rain for most at first. To the south, mild, unsettled weather, with rain and occasional strong winds. To the north, more settled conditions with brighter spells and winds slowly easing to lead to perhaps some frost or ice. Becoming very mild across all areas in time. Along the boundary, potential for significant weather with snow likely at times, in addition to the associated wintry hazards. Becoming colder than average heading into January with any unsettled, milder spells most likely for the west and south.
